Summer 2010

Canopy/Porch Project with wrought legs and frame, Essex.

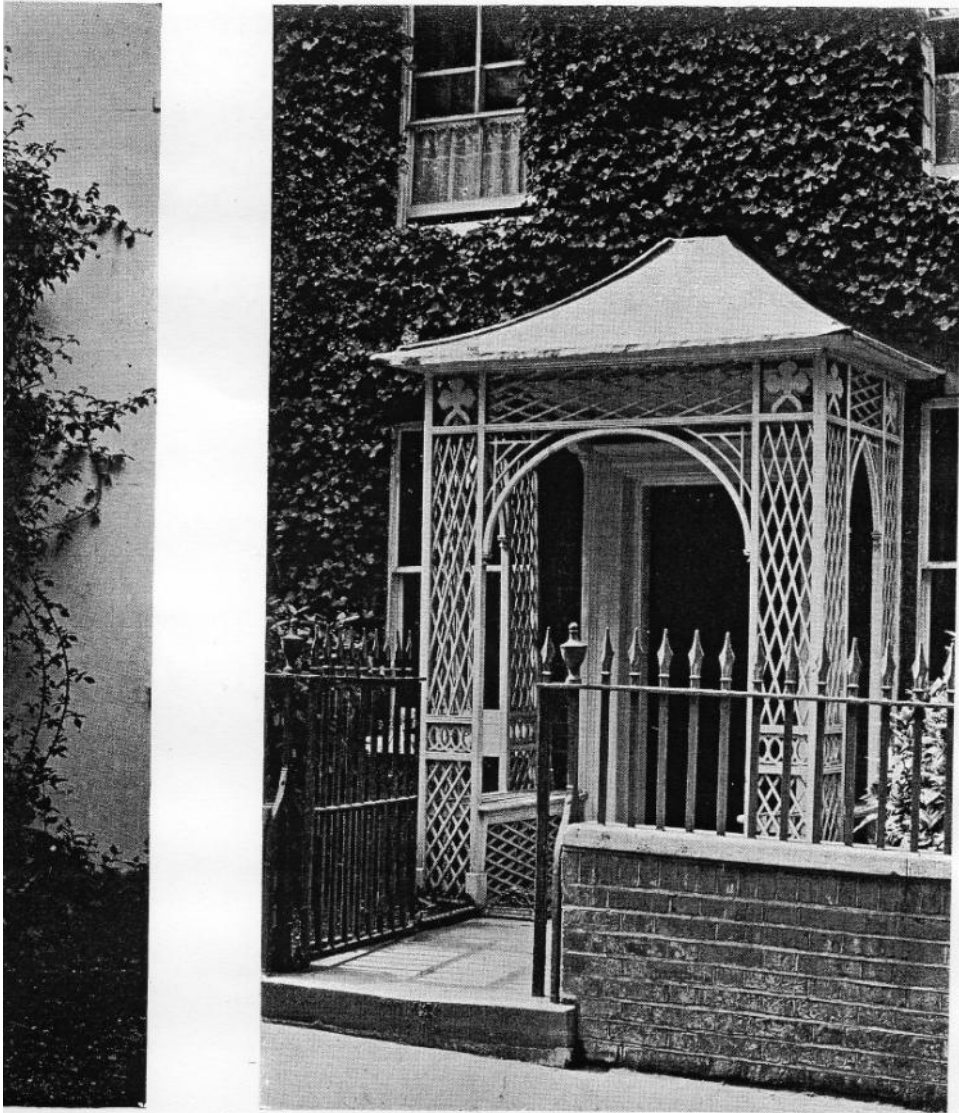

This client required two canopies to be designed in keeping with his listed house for the rear and side entrances. The intention was to install a structure that did not appear modern.

An oak internal ceiling that followed the shape of the roof with oak also used beneath a lead covering. The lead roofing by others.

The ironwork was in traditional Georgian style with a button at each intersection of the diamond pattern. A Roman key pattern beneath the roof edge. The extended legs were core drilled into the stone flags beneath, the canopy roof was bolted to the wall with electrical cable taken into the ceiling void to supply power to the lamps.

The following photos illustrate the process from design to installation.
